

FLOW

He saw a strange map. It looked essentially intact, except for a corner which had lost its color.

He remembered playing this game before. Match colors to colors, without crossing lines, yet filling the entire map. There had been only one unique solution.

He took out some markers, and scribbled furiously. Soon the map would be entirely filled with vibrant colors.

He could already sense himself rejoicing at the end.

